Synthesizing foundational works and curating seminal citations

This is a great question about the intersection of Disability Studies and the discipline of History. The user is asking for:

1. A detailed outline of how Disability Studies has impacted historical methods and methodology
2. Foundational works in historical disability studies
3. Well-cited articles in History journals that use Disability Studies insights and methodologies

This is a scholarly/academic question that requires specific knowledge about:

- The field of Disability Studies
- How it has influenced historical methodology
- Key texts and articles in the field
- Citation patterns in historical scholarship

Given that this is about academic scholarship and citation patterns, I should search for information about:

- Historical disability studies as a field
- Key methodological interventions from Disability Studies in History
- Foundational texts
- Well-cited articles

Let me start by searching for information about disability studies and history methodology.

Great, now I have a solid foundation of information. Let me compile a comprehensive outline based on the search results. I should create a detailed outline covering the impact of Disability Studies on historical methodology, provide foundational works, and list well-cited articles in history journals.

Done

Based on my research, I'll provide you with a comprehensive outline on the impact of Disability Studies on historical methodology, along with key foundational works and influential articles.

Detailed Outline: The Impact of Disability Studies on Historical Methods and Methodology

I. Introduction: The "Disability Studies Turn" in History

A. Douglas Baynton's foundational observation: "Disability is everywhere in history, once you begin looking for it, but conspicuously absent in the histories we write" Disability Studies Quarterly B. The emergence of disability history as a subfield (1980s-1990s) C. Theoretical foundations: social model vs. medical model of disability

II. Core Methodological Interventions from Disability Studies

A. Reconceptualizing Disability as an Analytical Category

1. Social constructionism: Understanding disability as socially constructed rather than purely biological
2. Intersectionality: Examining how disability intersects with race, gender, class, sexuality, and other identities
3. Historical contingency: Recognizing that concepts of disability change across time and cultures
4. Critical disability studies as methodology: Moving beyond studying disabled people to examining systems of power and normative structures

B. Archival Methodologies ("Crippling the Archive")

1. Reading archives "against the grain": Uncovering disability in sources not explicitly about disability
2. Addressing archival silences: Recognizing how ableism shapes what gets preserved and documented
3. Source criticism: Analyzing how medical, legal, and institutional records reflect ableist biases
4. Recovering marginalized voices: Finding disabled people's own perspectives in ego-documents, institutional records, and material culture

5. Accessibility as archival practice: Making archives physically and intellectually accessible

C. Expanding the Historical Record

1. Material culture approaches: Analyzing assistive technologies, prosthetics, and adaptive devices as historical evidence
2. Visual sources: Examining photographs, artwork, and popular culture representations
3. Oral history: Adapting interview methods for diverse communication styles
4. Digital humanities: Using computational methods to track disability discourse

D. Reframing Traditional Historical Questions

1. Disability as justification for inequality: Examining how disability rhetoric has been used to oppress multiple groups (women, immigrants, racial minorities)
2. Labor and economic history: Analyzing how concepts of ability/disability shaped industrial capitalism and welfare states
3. Citizenship and rights: Understanding exclusion and inclusion through disability lens
4. War and violence: Examining disabled veterans, eugenics, and the "handicapped Holocaust"

III. Theoretical Frameworks Influencing Historical Disability Studies

A. The Social Model of Disability

- Distinction between impairment and disability
- Focus on environmental and social barriers
- Critiques and refinements

B. Critical Disability Theory

- Interrogating normative assumptions about bodies and minds
- Historical epistemology approaches
- Foucauldian analysis of power, medicalization, and normalization

C. Crip Theory

- Parallels with queer theory
- Celebrating disability culture and identity
- Challenging compulsory able-bodiedness

D. Models Framework Critique

- Moving beyond simple medical/social model binary
- Incorporating moral, charitable, and rehabilitative models
- Historical epistemology of disability concepts

IV. Impact on Historical Practice

A. Challenging Master Narratives

- Disability as central to, not marginal in, American/European/global history
- Rewriting progress narratives
- Decentering able-bodied perspectives

B. Methodological Innovations

1. Attention to language and terminology: Analyzing historical disability terminology in context
2. Ethics of representation: Considering power dynamics in writing disability history
3. Collaborative research: Working with disability communities
4. Reflexivity: Historians examining their own positionality

C. Interdisciplinarity

- Bridging history with literary studies, sociology, anthropology, medical humanities
- Dialogue with science and technology studies (STS)
- Engagement with bioethics

V. Specific Historiographical Contributions

A. Rehabilitation and Integration

- Stiker's concept of "making identical" without "making equal"
- Analysis of 19th-20th century rehabilitation movements

B. Institutionalization and Deinstitutionalization

- Asylums, hospitals, and residential schools
- Eugenics and forced sterilization

C. Activism and Rights Movements

- Disability rights as civil rights
- Self-advocacy and "nothing about us without us"

D. Transnational and Comparative Approaches

- Moving beyond U.S.-centric disability history
 - Colonial disability history
 - Global circulation of disability concepts
